SOVIET TROOPS DRIVE NAZI HORDES BACK ACROSS UPPER DON

Nazi Spearheads Drive Closer To Rostov Further South

ARE IN COMPLETE ROUT

Nazis Make Frantic Attempts To Stem The Mighty Russian Drive

By International News Service

MOSCOW, July 18—Grim-faced Soviet troops today drove German hordes back in utter rout across the upper Don, south of Voronezh, but further south in the rich Don basin Nazi spearheads drove ever closer to Rostov, northern gateway to the oil-rich Caucasus.

The German withdrawal south of Voronezh became a complete rout as Soviet forces recrossed the river, destroyed Nazi bridgeheads and occupied a village on the west bank.

In a desperate effort to stem this mighty Russian drive, the Nazis threw into the battle west of Voronezh hurriedly assembled divisions from other fronts and fresh reinforcements from the rear.

Tens of thousands of Nazis were killed and hundreds of wrecked and burning German tanks littered the battlefield west of the key railway city, which Hitler boasted he had taken as far back as July 7.

In the Far South, however, Nazi field marshal Fedor Von Bock's spearheads drew ever closer to Rostov.

The Germans temporarily seemed to have abandoned their original intention to driving eastward to the Volga simultaneous with their attack southward toward Rostov, and were concentrating on the latter objective.

INDUSTRIAL FIRM AND ARMY CHAPLAIN WRITE ENDORSING WORK DONE FOR SOLDIERS BY THE U. S. O.; PRAISE THE ORGANIZATION

A large industrial firm and a chaplain in the United States Army today add their endorsements to the work done by the USO for the soldiers.

S. C. Kelton, secretary of the Rohm & Haas Company, writes telling of the many letters of endorsement he has received from men in the service who speak highly of the USO. The Rohm & Haas Company forwarded a check for $500.

The Rev. Andrew J. Solla, Major in the U. S. A., who is now a chaplain at Fort Dix, tells of his observations of the USO work done for the soldiers.

The $500 contributed by the Rohm & Haas firm will be credited to the $2050 quota of Bristol Township, as the Rohm & Haas plant is located in Bristol Township.

Mr. Hugh B. Eastburn, Chairman
Lower Bucks County Committee
United Service Organization
Bristol, Penna.

Dear Mr. Eastburn:

In accordance with your conversation with our factory managers, we take pleasure in enclosing our check for $500 made out to the United Service Organization. We made a very substantial contribution last year to the USO through our Philadelphia office and have received many reports from headquarters in regard to the very fine work being done by the USO in the various Army camps throughout the United States and other parts of the world.

I should like to add that during the past year, I have received dozens of letters from our boys in the service telling me what the U. S. O. means to them. These letters have come not only from many of the camps in the United States but from Australia, the Far East and Ireland. All of our boys in the service are enthusiastic about what the USO has meant to them.

Yours sincerely,
S. C. KELTON,
Secretary.

Headquarters
Office of the Chaplain

July 15, 1942.

Hugh B. Eastburn, Esq.
Mill Street
Bristol, Pa.

My dear Mr. Eastburn:

Because of the nature of my work as a Chapiain in our Armed Forces, more possibly than many line officers, I take a very keen interest in the welfare and morale of our soldiers.

Hence, I have observed very closely the work of the U. S. O. in the deep South, in the Mid-West, and for some months here in the East and I can truthfully say that it is doing a most marvelous job.

Men who have served in the Army or Navy know full well that the most difficult problem with service men is what to do when off duty?

The U. S. O. clubs, always located near camps and stations, have solved that problem, by giving them wholesome recreation in a home-like atmosphere.

Very cordially yours,
ANDREW J. SOLLA,
Major, U. S. A.

PLANES MOST EFFECTIVE AID TO GIVE BRITAIN

Senator Lodge Thinks That Air Superiority Will Decide Battle of Africa

URGES BIG PRODUCTION

(Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., (R) Mass., in the last of a series of three articles written for International News Service, says that the genius of America will not stop until it has produced many weapons to defeat the Axis and urges everyone on the home front to back up our allies to the limit.)

By Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr.,
U. S. Senator from Massachusetts; A Major in the Army Reserves, and a Member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee

Written Exclusively for International News Service

WASHINGTON, July 18—(INS)—North Africa is fundamentally an air theatre. This war's decisive factor has been the plane-gun-tank team. The side with overwhelming superiority in the air has a great advantage.

The most effective aid we can give to British empire forces in the battle of North Africa, I believe, would be to send them planes and more planes.

It takes time to land troops in large numbers to the far away Middle East—two or three months. When you land soldiers abroad your job has just begun. They must be conditioned after they land—conditioned to the climate and the country in which they are going to fight.

There must be a steady stream of replacements and supplies in huge quantities. It takes time to unload these supplies and to assemble them in their respective groupings, to estab-

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Water for one of the newest businesses in Doylestown is being supplied by one of the county seat's oldest springs—the spring located on the Clear Spring Hotel grounds.

By an early deed an owner provided that the people of the community shall always have access to the spring for water supplies. Until recent years there was a dam in the rear of the hotel property.

The spring, which has been cleaned out and never known to be low or dry, is one of the landmarks of the north end of the borough.

Attractive stone steps have been laid leading to the spring and the grounds about it terraced. An old fashioned pitcher pump has been installed at the spring.

Mrs. Emma Sampson, who says a pump has been doing duty—that is, a series of them—since 1806, believes that the Clear Spring can justifiably lay claim to being "the old oaken bucket" scene in Doylestown.

Once one of the best known hostelries of the County Seat, the Clear Spring Hotel, which is now a private home, has passed from one owner to another and the spring, in like fashion, became the contention of various property owners.

Echoes of the women's assembly held in connection with sessions of the General Synod in Albany, N. Y., the forepart of last month were presented by Mrs. Floyd V. Nagel at a meeting of the women's missionary society of the Reformed Church of North and Southampton in Churchville Church, a few days ago. Mrs. Nagle, who attended the assembly, said 700 women attended the meeting that day, and that the theme was "The Christian Woman, her devotional life, her home, her church and her world."

Mrs. Nagel also mentioned several missionaries who recently returned from their fields and who spoke briefly during the assembly, at which place four new missionaries were commissioned to work in China.

The annual reorganization meeting of the Chalfont Lions Club was held

Psychiatric Examination For Aged Spinster

PHILADELPHIA, July 18—(INS)—A psychiatric examination was planned today for Anna C. Dietrich, 60-year-old Ardmore Park spinster, who calmly told police she bludgeoned her 85-year-old mother to death with a heavy furnace shaker because she "had to do it."

For the past 15 years she had been keeping house for her mother, Mrs. Magdalene Dietrich, and her sister, also named Magdalene, 65. When authorities, summoned by neighbors who heard the elderly woman scream, entered the Dietrich home, the spinster was still holding the blood-spattered iron in her hands.

"Yes," she said, "I just killed mother. I had to do it."

Her sister, who was working at the time, said Anna suffered a nervous breakdown 11 years ago and had recently been undergoing treatment at a sanatorium.

Bucks County Lawyers Picnic at Warrington

WARRINGTON, July 18—When it comes to picnicking, the majority of the members of the Bucks County Bar Association are such perfect gentlemen—hubbies, too—that their wives' vacations were given priorities.

At least that was the absentees' explanation reported on Thursday afternoon when only 16 members assembled for the nineteenth annual picnic at the Warrington Inn.

In attendance were Judge Calvin S. Boyer; Webster Grim, president of the Bar Association; District Attorney Edward G. Biester; Paul J. Barrett, Bristol; Claire Biehn, Quakertown; William Conca, Bristol; Assistant District Attorney Willard S. Curtin, Morrisville; Arthur M. Eastburn; Emanuel H. Klein, Quakertown; J. Kirk Leatherman; Lawrence Monroe, Langhorne; Edwin H. Satterthwaite; William H. Satterthwaite, Jr.; Donald B. Smith, Perkasie; James W. Townsend, Langhorne, and T. Sidney Cadwallader, Yardley.

Following the usual games and sports program, the Bucks barristers dined al fresco on the beautiful lawn adjacent to the inn with Frank Conti as their host.

Since most lawyers would rather argue than eat, they ran true to form and enjoyed a round-table program of anecdotes, experiences and repartee.

Miscellaneous Gifts Are Given To Miss Piccari

Beautifies Club Grounds

—o—

(By "The Stroller")

Additional grounds recently acquired by St. Ann's Club, and which adjoin the club house on Wood street, have been beautified.

A concrete pool, 18 feet by 12 feet, and 18 inches deep, has been built, and in the center of the pool stands a concrete figure of an infant holding a fish. Out of the mouth of the fish there is a stream of water constantly bubbling.

The statue is 64 inches high from the base.

The water falls into the pool and makes the water ripple.

Around the pool there are flood lights which make the entire setting very attractive at night.

The entire affair was erected in honor of the 33 members of St. Ann's Club now in the service of their country.

STATE-WIDE BLACKOUT TO BE HELD WEDNESDAY

Civilian Defense Workers Hurry Preparations For Ban on Lights

10,000,000 INHABITANTS

By Raymond Wilcove
(U. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, July 18—A half million civilian defense workers hurried preparations today for an iron-clad ban on lights next Wednesday night, when the first statewide blackout to be held in Pennsylvania is clamped down upon 10,000,000 people.

The blackout will be of only one-half hour duration, at a secret time heralded by the shrill tones of air raid sirens, but during that brief period a strange quiet will engulf the entire State.

From Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, from the New York State boundary to the Mason-Dixon Line, all street lights will suddenly go out, houses will grow dark, normal traffic will stop, and the public will be ordered off the streets.

Next Wednesday's blackout and air raid drill will serve as preparation for a joint two-State blackout in Pennsylvania and New Jersey which will be staged some time before Labor Day, probably in August. State defense of-

Newtown Council Names Constable

NEWTOWN, July 18—At a meeting of the Newtown Borough Council, William McMullen was appointed high constable of the borough, a post he has formerly held. Newtown has been without a constable since the recent death of John Galt, and the entrance of Edward Bateman into the Army.

The report of the treasurer, W. Aubrey Merrick, showed that $1,000 in back taxes had been collected, as well as $2,300 of this year's taxes, by the tax collector, Mrs. Helen C. Croasdale. The treasurer was instructed to pay off a loan of $1,000 borrowed at the beginning of the year from the Newtown Trust Company.

Council decided to place war risk insurance on the fire house and council chamber. Repairs to the fire house basement were reported by Councilman Granville Stradling, and ordered made.

NAVAL WARFARE

While defending battleships, Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee virtually joined the ranks of those relegating them to secondary positions in future sea engagements.

He said that the so-called dreadnaughts must still be built on the theory that they will be useful if aircraft carriers are sunk and the struggle becomes "an old-fashioned slugging match." At the same time Vinson admitted that the carrier has become the backbone of the fleet.

Stanley Johnson of the Chicago Tribune, the only correspondent at the battle of the Coral Sea, offers some interesting evidence about the relative effectiveness of battleships and airplanes. He says that the American and Japanese battleships never fired a gun at each other and "as for this business of not seeing each other, the fleets in the Coral Sea never came closer in action than 170 miles."

Instead of ships firing broadsides at each other, the planes launched from carriers disappeared over the horizon and searched for targets. Johnson expects to see fleets fighting 500 miles apart. "We're witnessing now only the opening pages of an entirely new chapter in naval history," he says. "From now on the only effective guns on warships will be the anti-aircraft guns."

Johnson, of course, does not attempt to qualify as a naval expert but he had an unusual opportunity to see what actually happens under conditions of modern combat. Yet there is something to be said for Representative Vinson's idea. The Lexington was lost in the battle of the Coral Sea. Other carriers might be sunk and then, when the ships finally came to grips as in the old days, the battlewagons would be the only craft left to fight.

TYPEWRITERS AND BOMBERS

Donald M. Nelson, war production chief, explains that the 500,000 typewriters needed for the Army and Navy will not be devoted to increasing the amount of paper work. Some citizen-critics of the war effort have the idea that the war's prosecution may suffer from becoming bogged down in endless records.

Mr. Nelson, in requesting 25,000 of the largest users of typewriters to sell to the armed forces as many machines as could be spared, asserted that a typewriter is an essential piece of equipment on every bomber, something that, it is safe to bet, every schoolboy didn't know before. Furthermore, every battleship carries normally 59 typewriters, every aircraft carrier 55, every cruiser 31 and every destroyer seven. The complements, it is added, have not been cut in half.

The shortage afflicting the government results from the fact that typewriter manufacturers now are making guns and instruments. Therefore, only one-third of the 500,000 needed by the armed forces can be obtained from manufacturers and the remainder must be contributed by American business.

Some persons had no idea that 500,000 additional typewriters are required to win the war, but as Mr. Nelson explains, essential records must be kept. What is more important, the records must be legible. The government will pay a fair price for the machines it needs and no doubt businessmen will sell what typewriters they can to the government.

this week at the Colonial Gardens, Chalfont, where the retiring president, Raymond D. Locke, had the honor of inducting his brother, Paul G. Locke, as his successor. The meeting was devoted to a round table discussion during which a resume of the year's activities was given by Past President Locke. The financial report was presented and the installation of the newly-elected officers was in charge of Howard G. Krupp, a past president of the club.

Reviewing the accomplishments of the club during his term of office, Mr. Locke pointed out that the meetings had been successful. The club increased its membership. Mr. Locke was presented a past president's button.

Past President Krupp installed the following officers: Harris D. McKinney, first vice-president; Carl Young, second vice-president; H. Aubrey Clymer, third vice-president; Walter Hefterich and Hiram F. Brunner, directors for two years; Raymond D. Locke, secretary; Kenneth M. Hampton, treasurer; Ralph Shobert, Lion tamer, and Stanley K. Landis, tail twister.

Planes Most Effective Aid To Give Britain

lish the line of supplies—many, many details to be taken care of in order to develop the perfect result. A slip along the line and the machine jams up further along.

An army on wheels, such as we have today calls for all of the trades and professions of civilian life and more. Even the Army "traffic officer" has his essential duty to perform; for, without perfect order a traffic snarl may develop and hold up progress.

After the troops land in the battle country there must be a lot of studying by the officers. In this war we are fighting in all kinds of terrain. In Egypt one may observe officers pouring over maps and studying all of the peculiar features of the country. In Libya, for instance, they have to teach their soldiers sun-compassing, because of scarcity of land marks.

A soldier who happens to get away from his main body of troops during a dust storm or at night finds it well-nigh impossible to find his way back without a compass. His compass is his ever-ready reference.

In the North African desert one has to become accustomed to the water. It is brakish. But after a few days one is used to the water and mighty grateful to have some of it. One learns there how to conserve water—how to govern his drinking of it in order to make a little water meet his needs.

I found that it was a good idea to drink water only early in the morning and at night, and to go without it during the hot day time. Some times the soldiers when at a distance from water sources have to get along on a pint of water a day. Fortunately, the nights are cool and enable one to sleep well, provided a battle is not in progress.

Naturally, our people are eager to know whether our tanks and other weapons are as good as or superior to those of our enemy. I would say that we have fine manpower and good equipment. Our tanks are being constantly improved as battle experience dictates.

Superiority in tanks, of course, is constantly sought by both sides in the war. As in airplanes which are constantly improved so in tanks. Battle experience with our M-3 tanks revealed several ways in which they could be improved. These improvements were incorporated in the M-4 tank, which is being produced in great numbers. Undoubtedly other improvements will come along, because the genius of America will not stop until it has produced many weapons to cause the Axis powers to regret that they launched their program to conquer the world.

I want to praise the British soldiers for their persistence in the war. They are truly models of patience. They are heartened by the war effort of the United States. Let us strive on the home front to back up all of our allies in this struggle to the limit of our ability. We have declared war upon the Axis powers and we shall triumph.

Our soldiers will give a good account of themselves when they go into battle. Our troops in Libya showed the kind of stuff our soldiers are made of in war or peace.

I would like to see our troops get into the land fighting in a big way—a lot at once in the typically American way, with no half-way measures, no piece-meal attacks—a concentrated thrust that will overwhelm our foes.

AUTHOR OF "GOODBYE, MR. CHIPS" AND "LOST HORIZON"

CHAPTER FIFTY-FOUR

"Mr. Rainier told me only details of his past," I said to his wife.

"Ah, but the details—those are what I want to hear. Did he remember things very clearly?"

"Yes."

"Places and people?"

"Yes."

"Tell me some of them."

I hesitated, again catching the note of hysteria in her voice; she added: "It doesn't hurt me—as much as you think. Tell me some of them. . . . You say he met her first at Melbury?"

"Yes—on that first Armistice Day."

"And they were married in London?"

"Yes."

"Where did he propose to her? Did he tell you that?"

"A village in the country somewhere—I think it was called Beachings Over."

"Beachings Over . . . an odd name."

"England is full of them."

"I know—like Nether Wallop and Shallow Bowells. . . ." She turned round with my drink. "And war coming to them all again. Do you think there's still a chance of avoiding it?"

"There's always a chance of postponing it."

"No—we've had enough of that."

"I think so too."

"But we're not ready yet, are we?"

"We're terribly unready. We missed our ways years ago and found a wide, comfortable road, fine for sleepwalkers, but it had the major drawback of wandering just anywhere, at random."

"Charles always thought that, but as a rich man it wasn't easy for him to say so. Being rich tied his hands and stopped his mouth and took up his time—so that the wasted years wasted him too. . . ."

"I think he's begun to realize that."

"Yes, he's sure of something at last. . . . Another drink?"

"No, thanks."

A long pause. "There's nothing we can do about it now, is there?"

"Are you talking about—er—the country—or—er—"

"Both, in a way."

"I think one can make up for lost time, but one can't salvage it. That's why his quest is so hopeless."

Her voice softened. "So you think that's where he's gone—to look for her?"

"It's possible. . . . But to look for her as she was, and that's impossible."

The hysteria touched her voice again. "Tell me another detail—no matter how small or trivial—please tell me—"

"I think you're needlessly upsetting yourself."

"No, it isn't upsetting—it's—it's almost helping me in a way—tell me something—"

"I'd rather not, and besides, it's hard to think—"

"Oh, but you said he talked all night and you've only talked for an hour so far. There must be hundreds of things—names of places or incidents that happened here or there—or how she looked. . . ."

"Well . . . let me see . . ."

"How did she look? Did he remember her well?"

"He seemed to, though he never described her exactly—but he did say—I believe he said when they first met she was wearing a little fur hat like a fez. . . . Or no, I may have mixed things up—that was Kitty when she stepped out of the train at Interlaken."

"Interlaken?"

"They had a holiday there—he and Kitty."

"I know. And she was wearing a little fur hat like a fez? Or the other one? Or both, maybe—but wouldn't that be rather improbable?"

"Yes, of course. I'm sorry—it was like me to choose a detail I'd get confused over."

She put her hand in mine. "It doesn't matter. You've been very kind. I wish I'd known you better—and earlier. Thank you again."

"You understand that I'm anxious to help both of you?"

"Yes, I understand. But I don't know how you can."

"Anyhow, there's a sort of chilly comfort in thinking how unimportant all one's personal affairs are these days."

She got up and began walking to the door. "Yes, but when that sort of comfort has chilled one quite thoroughly, the warmth comes—the feeling that nothing matters except personal feelings . . . the what-if-the-world-should-end-tonight mood."

We shook hands at the doorway, and there she added, smiling: "Perhaps our world is ending tonight. . . ."

I stayed in the drawing room a little while after she had gone; then I thought it would be only civil to find Woburn. He was in the library, listening to the radio. "Still nothing definite. You know, if there's a war, I want to get in the Air Force." We had another drink and talked for about an hour before going upstairs.

I had asked Sheldon to call me at seven; he did so, bringing in a cup of tea. "I thought you'd wish to know the news—it just came over the wireless." Then he told me.

I got up hurriedly. It was a perfect late-summer morning, cool and fresh, with a haze of mist over the hills. Woburn had brought a small radio into the breakfast room; we hardly exchanged a greeting, but sat in front of the instrument, listening as the first reports came through. Presently Mrs. Rainier entered, stood in the doorway to hear a few sentences, then joined us with the same kind of whispered perfunctory good-morning. The bulletin ended with a promise of more news soon, then merged into music.

That was how we had breakfast on that first morning of the second war—to the beat of a dance band and with the sunlight streaming through the windows of Stourton.

After breakfast we heard the news repeated, and found the strain almost intolerable. We strayed about the gardens, the three of us, then came back to the radio again; this time there were a few extra items, reports of half the world's grim awakening.

The newspapers came, but they were already old—printed hours before.

I telephoned the City office, and had to wait twenty minutes before the line was clear.

Then Woburn, after wandering restlessly in and out of rooms, said he would take a long walk. I think he would have liked either Mrs. Rainier or myself or both of us to suggest accompanying him, but we stayed each other with a glance. "He's a nice boy," she said, when he had gone.

"Yes, very."

"Does Charles like him?"

"Yes, I think so."

"I always hoped he would. I feel we've almost adopted him, in one sense."

"I sometimes think he feels that too."

"I'd like him to feel that . . . I once had a child, a boy, but he died. . . ."

"I never knew that."

"Charles would have made a good father, don't you think?"

"Yes . . . he must have been terribly disappointed."

"What will Woburn do now?"

"He said he'd join the Air Force."

She moved restlessly to the radio, where the music had suddenly stopped. Another news item: the Germans had crossed the Polish frontiers at many places; the war machine was already clanking into gear.

"I can't stand this—I half wish now we'd gone with him for the walk. Don't leave me alone here—you don't have to return to the City, do you?"

"No, not yet, anyhow. I just rang up the office. They haven't had any news or message."

"Oh . . . let's go somewhere then. I'll drive you. There's nothing else to do—we'll go mad if we sit over the radio all day."

We took her car, which was an open sports Bentley, and set out. The Stourton parkland had never looked more wonderful; it was as if it had the mood to spread its beauty as a last temptation to remain at peace, or, failing that, as a last spendthrift offering to a thankless world. We passed quickly, then threaded the winding gravel roads over the estate to an exit I had not known of before—it opened on to the road to Faringdon. Through the still misty morning we raced westward and northward; but at Lechlade the sun was bright and the clock showed ten minutes past ten. A few miles beyond Burford the country rolled into uplands, and presently we left the main road altogether, slowing for tree-hidden corners and streams that crossed the lanes in wide sandy shallows, till at last in the distance we saw a rim of green against the blue.

"Where are you taking me?"

"Oh, just somewhere in England, as the war bulletins may say one of these days."

We drove on, mile after mile, till at a turn of the road the hills ahead of us sharpened into a ridge and at the same turn also there was a signpost which made me cry out, with a sudden catch of breath: "Did you see that?"

"I know. I wanted to come here."

"But—you shouldn't—it's only torturing yourself—"

"No, no. I promise I won't be upset—see, I'm quite calm."

"But all this probing of the past—"

"That's where the future will take us, maybe—back to the past. A simpler England. Old England."

And then we came upon the gray cottages fronting the stream, the square-towered church, the ledge in the stream where the water sparkled. We parked our car by the church and walked along the street. A postman late on his morning rounds stared with friendly curiosity at us and the car, then said "Good morning." A fluff of wind blew tall hollyhocks towards us. Somebody was clipping a hedge; an old dog loitered into a fresh patch of shade. Little things—but I shall remember them long after much else has been forgotten.

There seemed no special significance anywhere, no sign that a war had begun.

But as we neared the post office I caught sight of something that to me was most significant of all—a small brown two-seater car. I walked over to it; a man saw me examining the license. "If you're looking for the tall gentleman," he came over to say, "I think he took a walk up the hill."

I turned to Mrs. Rainier. "Charles!" was all she whispered.

"Might be. It meets the Club porter's description and it was hired from a London firm."

We turned off the main road by a path crossing an open field towards the hill; as we were climbing the chime of three quarters came up to us, blown faint by the breeze. The slope was too steep for much talk, but when we came within a few yards of the ridge she halted to gain breath, gazing down over the village.

"Looks as if it has never changed."

"I don't suppose it has, much, in a thousand years."

"That makes twenty seem only yesterday."

"If you meet him, what are you going to say?"

"I don't know. I can't know—before I see him."

"He'll wonder why on earth we've come here, of all places."

"Then we'll ask him why on earth he's here. Perhaps we'll both have to pretend we came to look at the five counties."

She resumed the climb, and in another moment we could see that the summit dipped again to a further summit, perhaps higher, and that in the hollow between lay a little pond. There was a man lying beside it with arms outstretched, as if he had flung himself there after the climb. He did not move as we approached, but presently we saw smoke curling from a cigarette between his fingers.

"He's not asleep," I said. "He's just resting."

I saw her eyes and the way her lips trembled; something suddenly occurred to me. "By the way, how did you know there were five counties?"

But she didn't answer; already she was rushing down the slope. He saw her in time to rise to his feet; she stopped then, several yards away, and for a few seconds both were staring at each other, hard and still silent. Then he whispered something I couldn't hear; but I knew in a flash that the gap was closed, that the random years were at an end, that the past and the future would join. She knew this too, for she ran into his arms calling out: "Oh, Smithy—Smithy—it may not be too late!"

Today's Quiet Moment

Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

O Thou who knowest our hearts, and who seest our temptations and struggles, strengthen us for the trials that lie before us, and enable us in Thy strength to overcome them. We are thankful to Thee for not leaving us to depend upon our own strength or our own wisdom to find the way of salvation. Make us ever willing to accept Thy providence, and to believe that Thy will contains the best for us; that all things work together for good to them that love Thee. So fill our hearts with love for Thee that we shall know and believe these great truths. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WASHINGTON—(INS)—Geographically Spanish and Portuguese may be neighbors, but linguistically they're vowels apart. Writing in the Pan American Union Bulletin, F. ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Bud Abbott and Lou Costello celebrate their 12th year together in a highly explosive comedy called "Rio Rita," which opened at the Grand Theatre.

The picture has nice balance, with Kathryn Grayson and John Carroll providing colorful romance and song.

Jane Withers tries her hand at farce comedy in her new film, "The Mad Martindales." The film, which is slated to open Sunday at the Grand Theatre, depicts the adventures of a sub-deb daughter of a sub-normal family and results in some of the funniest situations ever filmed.

Milton Berle is also showing in "Whispering Ghost."

BRISTOL THEATRE

Bela Lugosi, who takes the sinister role of Boroff in "SOS Coast Guard" now being shown at the Bristol Theatre, has a corner on the "heavy" market, his name being synonymous with horror, chills, cold shivers and stifled shrieks.

A movie about the movies is "Girls' Town," at the Bristol Theatre, with Edith Fellows and June Storey in the co-starring roles.

Tomorrow's offerings are "Caught in the Draft" and "Home in Wyomin'."

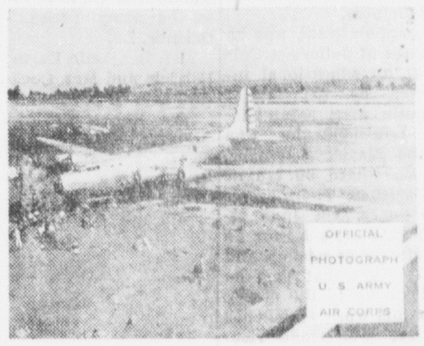

RITZ THEATRE

If you're in need of a good hearty laugh, and who isn't—you just can't afford to pass up that sparkling slice of cinematic joviality, "Sullivan's Travels," which arrived last night at the Ritz Theatre.

Written and directed by Preston Sturges, one of the Hollywood giants, and starring Joel McCrea and Veronica Lake, "Sullivan's Travels" is a fresh, bright idea in screen plots which romps along, popping up laugh-loaded surprises all along its route.

VOLTZ NINE CHALKS UP ELEVENTH STRAIGHT VICTORY; 4TH CONSECUTIVE WIN IN SECOND-HALF RACE OF LEAGUE

St. Ann's field appeared like a parade of pitchers last night as the Voltz-Texaco team chalked up its eleventh straight victory and fourth straight of the second half race. The tilt was a battle for first place with the gasoleers now having a firm grip on the position and it will take at least two defeats to even budge them.

Final score was 4-3 and the Voltzmen lost and won the game in the final inning. In the first half of the frame, they saw their 2-0 lead go to the winds when the Hunter team scored three runs. They came back in their part of the inning to score two tallies and come through with the victory.

Bragg started on the mound for the winners and when the going got rough in the final canto, he was relieved by Hal Shackleton. Shackleton had trouble in finding the plate and pitched six straight balls before Manager George Dougherty took him out and replaced him with "Bill" Gallagher. Gallagher got out of the hole and was the winning pitcher.

"Jim" Katz was on the hill at the start for the munition makers. He hurled until the fourth when the Voltz team scored a run and had another on base. Rotundo relieved him and fanned the side to get out of the rut. In the last half of the fifth inning, Rotundo was taken out and Eddie Lada stepped to the mound. Runners were on second and third when Lada went in and he only pitched to Dougherty who sacrificed the winning run across. Rotundo was the losing moundsman.

Cooper started the Voltz team to victory in the final frame by beating out a tap to Rotundo. Mazzillo hit to Palumbo who fumbled and both runners were safe. Moore batted for Hibbs and advanced both men with a sacrifice. A wild pitch scored Cooper with the tieing marker. Shoemaker was hit with a pitched ball. George Dougherty batted for Baiocchi and promptly laid down a bunt which scored Mazzillo with the winning run.

The first part of the inning had been a wild affair with Hunter scoring three times on two hits. Rotundo opened with a single to left. Lawrence drew a pass and Del Rossi hit safely to left to fill the bags. Pagnotta worked Bragg for a pass to force home a run. Here Shackleton walked to the mound and proceeded to pass Palumbo and force home another run. Shackleton pitched two balls to Palumbo and was relieved by Gallagher. Gallagher passed Palumbo and the third run walked home. With Busch at the plate, the squeeze play failed and Pagnotta went out at the plate. Busch then walked. Carter struck out and Russo was passed to fill the bags again but Cesario hit into a force-play.

A single by Tazik, a sacrifice, and a hit by Mazzillo gave Voltz its first tally in the third and the second run came across in the fourth when Shoemaker walked, stole second, and scored on two errors.

BRISTOL A. A. NINE TO PLAY MAYFAIR CLUB

Bristol A. A. will travel to Philadelphia tomorrow afternoon to play the Mayfair Club, present leaders of the Philadelphia League, at Ryan and Rowland streets, Philadelphia, at 2:30 p. m.

The Mayfair Club won from the Bristol boys a few weeks ago by the score of 9 to 7. It was due to a poor decision on left fielder Simmons of Mayfair, who was struck out by pitcher Danny Keegan when he tried to bunt the ball. But the umpire called it a ball, giving Simmons a chance to knock a home run with the bases loaded, winning the game. Manager Mulholland has added more power to his club by signing John Miksis and brother, Eddie, from Burlington, and Jimmy Kelly, fleet outfielder, of Cornwells. Danny Keegan will toss them for the A. A. boys with Jesse VanZant or Stan Felkner back of the plate. The other positions will be held down by Carter, 1b; Palumbo, 2b; Cooper, 3b; E. Miksis, ss; J. Miksis, lf; Ed. Hunter, cf; Kelly, rf; Berry, extra.

State-Wide Blackout To Be Held Wednesday

ficials plan to make it a surprise blackout, with only the week of the drill announced in advance, if the permission of Army authorities can be obtained. In the event this permission is not forthcoming, the August blackout will be similar to the one held next week, except that it will cover two States instead of one. The second blackout will also be for one-half hour.

Unlike the air raid drill held last month, when the State underwent all-night partial blackouts, more familiarly known as "dimouts," next Wednesday's practice test will consist of only the one-half hour blackout.

As during last month's blackout, there will be simulated incidents which will give defense workers a chance to put to the test their training in first aid and other defense measures.

The only exceptions to the blackout will be railroads, air field beacon and obstruction lights, radio tower lights, and navigation lights.

Industrial plants operating under blackout control of the War Department will receive their blackout instructions from the War Department, but all other industrial plants will black out under instructions of their local defense councils.

During the blackout, lights may be kept on in homes and places of business which are carefully shielded with blackout material so as to prevent the illumination from being seen outside.

AMERICA IS GOING TO SHOOT MORE— AND TALK LESS

A machine gun in action will use in 4 minutes, 30 pounds of copper, which is a mile and a half of telephone line.

The copper supply of this country is going into shells and not into wire.

America is going to shoot more and talk less.

For with copper and other metals and materials drafted for the duration, we can't build new telephone lines to carry the all-time-high loads of telephone calls—and those loads grow heavier every day.

There are "traffic jams" on telephone lines to Washington and other centers of war activity. There is danger that all-important calls of the government, the armed forces and the war industries may be delayed.

We must give war calls the green light all the way.

Therefore, do not make Long Distance calls unless urgently important.

When you must make a Long Distance call, avoid the rush hours if possible. Call between noon and 2 P. M.; between 5 and 7 P. M.; or between 9 P. M. and 9 A. M.

Be brief. Plan what you want to say so that a call-back will not be necessary.

Every call you save . . . every second you save . . . helps to give WAR CALLS a clear track.
